Language for the classroom

Following explanations, asking questions, giving opinions, working in groups and taking notes.

- Placement test before arrival
- Taught at each student's level
- All course materials
- PLUS end-of-course certificate

AFTERNOONS

School lessons

Students join the school's existing timetabled classes alongside its pupils, in subjects such as geography and English history.

Students from the same group are spread across classes, normally one to three per class. They are placed by age and English level, sometimes a year or two below their own school year, so that they can take part properly.

They attend to use and practise their English, not to study the subject, with no assessed work and no exams.

A school buddy

Each student is paired with a school buddy and, depending on the school, may follow their timetable, attend lessons and have lunch together.

Boarding school life

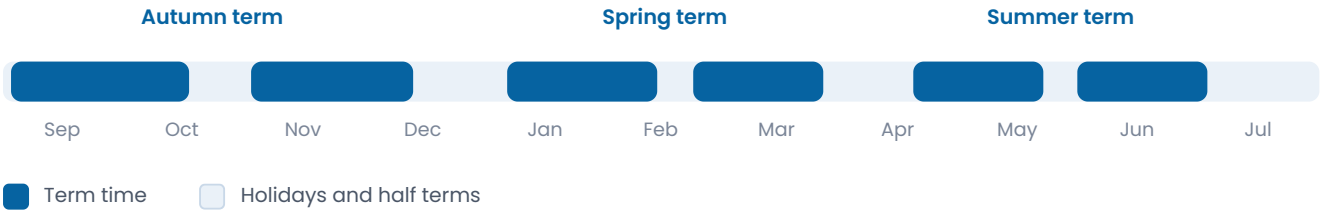
Most British boarding schools teach a mix of UK and international pupils. Boarders live at the school in boarding houses, while day pupils go home at the end of each school day.

Pupils usually belong to a house, and the school day often starts with assembly, tutor time or chapel.

Integration students stay at the school as boarders and join the school's own pupils in lessons and activities.

The school year

Integration runs during term time. Dates vary from school to school.



School years and ages

Pupils' ages during each school year.
